English Second Language – Term 3

Project Instructions

During the Industrial Revolution child labour exploded as more factories opened up. Due to the harsh working conditions, many laws were enacted to limit the exploitation of children in the work force. Have these laws been effective or does child labour still exist today? What are the problems a child faces when they are forced to work at such a young age? What impact does working have on their education, health, family and friends? What is being done to protect child workers? Find the answer to these and many more questions by exploring this WebQuest.

TASK

You and three other employees have just been hired by the International Labour Organization (ILO). Your job is to travel around the world investigating claims of child labour. You have learned that child labour exploded during the Industrial Revolution but does it still exist today? You will research a variety of sources, evaluate the author's claims and evidence, and then use the information gained during your research to create a problem/solution PowerPoint presentation to the class with your group. There are four different roles needed to complete this task.

Please refer to this link for further details:

http://zunal.com/webquest.php?w=226106

The Powerpoint presentation must be 10 – 15 slides